Nigeria's Central Bank decided to leave its benchmark interest rate unchanged yesterday, November 22 despite the announcement by the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) that the country has sunk deeper into a recession.

Analysts say there is little more the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) can do to stimulate growth, calling on the government to take on the mantle to pull the Nigerian economy out of recession.

Nigerian FX market calm as rates see stability

The bureau de change (BDC) market showed some stability as rates remained unchanged at $/N399.00 all through the previous week, revealing no change from that recorded during the penultimate week-ending November 11, 2016.

This followed an announcement by the FMDQ OTC Securities Exchange (the Exchange) on November 15, 2016, of a change in the methodology for the derivation of the daily Market Spot FX Closing Rate, a move which

OPEC oil deal likely, officials say

Organisation of Oil Exporting Coutnries (OPEC) officials said Tuesday they were close to agreement on the outlines of a production cut deal, but warned there were sticking points to be resolved next week when the group formally meets in Vienna, the Wall Street Journal reports.

Notably, the Organisation of the Petroleum Exporting Countries is considering a deal that would last for six months rather than the previously discussed year, officials said.

"It is likely everybody will be
